Attorney General John Ashcroft
U.S. Department of Justice
950 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20530

Dear Mr. Ashcroft:

As an active member of my community and an avid supporter and user of Microsoft products, I feel I must take a moment of my time in order to voice what I feel is in the best interest of the American people.

Microsoft has done more for the IT world than any other company in history, and as a firm believer in the American ethic of everyone having the opportunity to prosper, I believe Microsoft, under the stated settlement plan, has the right to rid itself of any further legal action. The use of the valuable time and money of the American people has been spent for three long years in this case, long enough for a settlement to be reached.

The settlement would require Microsoft to undergo various changes that further open the gates of competition to new and struggling IT companies. The thrust of the Justice Department's case, that Microsoft used unfair business practices, has now been addressed.

The American people deserve to benefit from new innovations in computer software, not just for the sake of the economy, but also to keep American businesses at the head of the pack in the global market.

In your capacity as attorney general, I hope you will speak on behalf of the consumer and tax payer, who want to see Microsoft get back to what it does best: serving the people with manageable, affordable, and innovative computer software.

Thank you for your time and consideration in this crucial matter.

Sincerely,
